My research focuses on a fundamental question about the role of ER in psychopathology. I started studying this issue within domains of maladaptive behavior (i.e. violence) and personality disorders (i.e. antisocial). Within this broad area of study, my work takes place within a network of international collaborations with scholars with diverse competences. My recent preliminary results on GD highlight the opportunity for a groundbreaking approach to this disorder. In my project, I integrate psychophysiological, observational, and performance-based assessment paradigms to test my questions using a suite of experimental, controlled observation, naturalistic, and quantitative review designs. The long-term goal of my research is to understand the differences in gamblers regarding behavior and risk-profile in order to prevent and treat GD in an ER perspective.
